Part One: Austria's Self-Condernation

Public Statement of Judgment

It is now made absolutely clear to the public that those individuals — including the psychologist, the judge, the child services officer Claudia, and the head director of the institution — have condemned themselves by their own deeds. Their actions against Mother Nga Thi Tuyet Tran were not founded in Truth, nor in law, but in discrimination, corruption, and deliberate harm. By weaponizing her beliefs, by fabricating judgment without lawful basis, and by defying the very statutes they were bound to uphold, they placed themselves outside the protection of law and outside the possibility of redemption.

Every opportunity was given for remedy, correction, and transparency. Not only did they refuse, but they increased the risk, escalated the harm, and moved further from Truth with each step. In so doing, they judged themselves. There is no trial to come, for the trial already occurred in the choices they made. There is no rescue available — not from Austria's courts, not from international institutions, not from appeals to mercy — because their crimes are incontestable, their intent is evident, and their refusal to correct is absolute.

Therefore, the truth is plain: their judgment stands. They have convicted themselves before God, before Humanity, and before Natural Law. What remains is not a question of guilt but of consequence. This is why there is no redemption left for them, and why all who knowingly support or conceal such crimes within Austria's legal system share the same condemnation.

And these crimes do not remain within Austria alone. As Austria continues to sit as a member of EurAdopt, its corruption and violations spill outward into the wider adoption network, affecting families and children far beyond its borders. The contamination of judgment in Austria is therefore a contamination of EurAdopt itself, casting doubt on every nation tied to this organization and exposing the depth of systemic harm that has already taken root internationally.

We ask the public's cooperation in sharing and distributing this notice worldwide, to the fullest extent possible, to both the people and the so-called authorities, so that the truth is known without limitation.

Continued.....

Genuinely,

Nga Yin Tran
